

In regard to your accessible transportation discussion paper the one point I am most interested in is making all modes of transportation safer for those with severe allergies. Given the increasing prevalence of severe allergies all carriers should have readily accessible doses of epinephrine and staff trained to deploy it (or opportunities for people to be good Samaritans). In addition, food options should not contain the most prevalent allergens and there should also be allergen free zones on carriers.

Thank you for your time and consideration

Greg