

Hello,

I have 2 daughters and both are severely allergic to peanuts and Treenuts. We travel often and find it difficult to access food on international travels where the distances are long. We do bring our own food at all times as well as emergency medication (Epinephrines) but there should be some provision for allergy friendly food as well similar to Gluten free meal. Airlines should ensure the staff is well trained in identifying allergy symptoms and mandatory carry Epi pens at all times similar to AEDs.

At times we have had issues not allowing to board earlier to wipe seats and making in advertant comments as "you have created a major issue for airlines and should not be travelling". It is very hard to see a child being told to stop travelling due to no fault of theirs.

This would make air travel much easier on families with food allergies.

Thanks,
