

To whom ever it concerns,

My family does quite a bit of travelling and both my sons are severely allergic to all nuts and fish. We have been horrified at times when some airlines are still using nuts as a snack. We usually tell the pilot to make an announcement that we are on the flight. Also some airlines cater to kosher foods with religious restrictions and vegan foods for people who do not eat meat. I feel we have been discriminated against. My kids usually do not eat on any airlines because they don't guarantee and we even get hassled because we have to bring our own foods on the flight. This needs to change. The restaurants once you go through customs should also cater to allergies. In that case if airlines do not want to accomodate, at least people can pick up a lunch and dinner meal from the airport restaurants to take on the flight with them that can also be a hot meal.

Thank you for all your emails.
